His Colleagues Will Again Resign Their were snowed-in up on the Broken Bow line last winter. The train just managed to make a little Portfolios-Two Shocks of Earthquake in station along about dars, and we tied up there for the night. There was a light load on, but for the night. There was a light load on, but every mother's son and one daughter of them piled out and made for the only hotel in the place. Of course, Charley and I had to help the daughter along, and when we reached the hotel everything was taken. They fixed the daughter up with a cot in the hall, and the urbane cierk offered Charley and I the soft ide of a couple of chairs in the office; but, you see, we had been figuring on just such a situation, and we thought we might get som thing better. We didn't swear and try to cut up rusiy, but Charley stepped over and set his sample case in a chair near the stove, around which everybody was standing, then we lit our clears and waited for supper—or developments. In a minute, a little, nervous fellow, who had been spreading his coat tails before the stove, got too warm, and looked for a chair. The one with Charley's sample case in it was nearest, and he reached out for the case to set it off the chair. Well, he hadn't fouched it before Charley gave a yell that would have curdled the blood of a Sioux; he jumped over everybody between him and the case, and snatched it away from the little fellow in a minute.

"My Lord] don't touch that," he gasped at the man, as though he had snatched him bodily from the jaws of scath. He lovingly set the case at his feet, and while everybody in the room was gawking at him i inquired in my most innocently casual manner:

"How'the nitro-glycerine trade now, Charley?"

"First rate," he answered, carelessly. "You see it's ne work to sell our goods. The explosives we hander have one-third more power than those sold by any other house, and we sell our goods at the same figure the other houses do theirs—all I've got to do is show the goods and they sell themselves. I can just take one of those carridges out somewhere and explode it—a man sees what it will do and the stuff its soid, if he wasts anything in that fine. It's a little disagreeable in this weather—have to go so far away from everything to show the stuff around." "I don't see how on earth you dare carry the stuff around," I murmured, giancing at the sample case between Charley's feet.

"On, well, a fellow gets used to it," he said with the air of a man who carries his life in his hand. "Not so much danger in cold weather—warmth expands it and then it is more liable to explode"—he reached down here and laid his hand on the side next the slove. "Greatest danger is from somebody medding with it. Our house never had but one accident from a man on the road. "Come to think of it," he whispered nervously to the clerk, "I won't want that room to-night. I guess I'll stay in the train. I've got some things there I want to watch, you know."
The clerk assured him the trainmen would look after them, but he wouldn't have it that way—nothing would do but he must go himself. I happened up beside them just then, and finding he was bound to leave, took the room in the most innocent way in the world.

The clerk assigned me the room all right, but he kept glaring over at Charley and his case full of infernal machines all the while, and the little man started for the door.

He said he didn't think he could wait for supper—it was so close in there it made him sick, and he'd have to get some air, he said. The clerk tried to detain him, but he didn't have time to talk—he bolted for the door and noundered off through the drifts. When Charley and I came from supper we could see war all around. The guests were drawn up in battle array on the side of the office and the clerk headed thein. Charley glanced down at the anathemized sam ple-case.

"What's the matter with that?" he asked, and, picking it up, he carried it to the desk, lifted it as high as he could and let it drop before the horrified clerk could interfere.

Before I can get to sleep at night I ride a bob-tail to the four corners and take as regularly as I used to take morphine. Sometimes I find it necessary to take two, and I have taken as many as three trips, but usually 10 cents worth of street car puts me in such a condition that I fall asleep as soon as I strike the bed. Decline on Account of Disbursements for Interest and Dividends-Wheeling and Lake Erie Drop and Rise-Big Falling Off in Stock Exchange Business Last

Speculation was tame in all the Wall street markets. There was a dearth of news calculated to influence prices either one way or the other and even the rumor mill was comparatively idle. Operators are simply backing filling, preferring to keep their dealings within restricted limits rather than to spread themselves out at a time of the year when themselves out at a time of the year when the financial situation is fraught with more or less uncertainty. The halting disposition favors the bears, who are selling the list in a quiet way, and evidently expect tight money or some other unfavoracle circumstance to help them later on in gathering in their shorts at a profit.

The first movement of prices this morning was upward, the advance having ranged from 's to 'g per cent, but subsequently there was a decline of 'g to 15's per cent in the active shares. The specialties did some ground and lofty tumbling. Wheeling & Lake Erie dropped 15's, to 435's, and rose to 455's. Denver pref. broke 15's, to 535's, and rallied to 55. Oregon Improvement jumped 25's, to 46's, and Quiek-

Improvement jumped 2%, to 46%, and Quick-silver pref. 2%, to 32%.

The market declined in the face of the large disbursements for interest and dividends disbursements for interest and dividends begun to-day, including the payment of the coupons on Kansas & Texas general mortgage bonds, about which the bears have had so much to say lately. Altogether the disbursements by railway and other corporations this month will approximate $20,000,000. The Government will in addition pay out $3,000,000 for interest and a much larger sum for pensions. Thus far the promises by the bulls have not been alluring enough to make the recipients of all this money evince any anxiety to invest the latter in railroad securities.

any anxiety to invest the latter in railroad securities.

One disappointment met with by the bulls was the announcement from Washington that the Pacific Railway Investigating Committee had struck a snag and would not render a report favorable to the Union Pacific after all.

A good many Wall street people have been loading up with Union Pacific on the recent talk that the report would be a good one, and their disappointment knows no bounds.

The Reading trustees received in all about $12,000,000 from the bond and stock holders in the shape of assessments, and after allowing for everything, including $1,000,000 to be paid the syndicate for its services, there will remain about $1,000,000 to be turned over to the reorganized company.

remain about $1,000,000 to be turned over to the reorganized company.

Business at the Stock Exchange last month showed an enormous falling off as compared with 1886. The decrease in stocks was 4,164,000 shares, in State and railroad bonds $42,366,000, and in Governments $350,000.

The Eric report for the quarter ended Sept, 30, shows gross earnings of $6,495,532, an increase of $218,595, but owing to an in-crease in expenses and other charges, there was a deficit of $38,000 against a surplus of $2,454 last year.

FINANCIAL AFFAIRS ABROAD. The Bank of England discount rate is unchanged at 4 per cent. The proportion of its reserve to liabilities is 48.04 per cent. against 48.23 per cent. last week. The Bank gained £77,000 specie for the week, while the Bank of France statement shows a decrease of 3,225,000 francs gold and an increase of 675,000 francs silver. In London consols were quoted ex-interest at 101 13-16 for money and at 102 for the account. Rentes declined from 81f. 85c. to 81f. 25c. Notwithstanding the extreme cold, there was a large attendance in court, as it was expected that evidence would be brought forward to prove the statement made by Lawyer Kinsley yesterday that Dr. Duggan had attempted to outrage Weidler's wife and that Weidler had been driven insane by it.

Mrs. Teresa Vanderpool, the prisoner's mother, sobbed when called to the witness stand. Her testimony went to show that the prisoner was at times subject to insanity. Her family, she said, were victims to typhoidmania. When her son had it he was deranged for six months at a time, Five of her family had died of the fever. Dr. Meyer, her brother, had died from disease at Randall's Island. Kate W. Weidler, the wife of accused, was called, and came forward weeping. She testified that her mother died about four weeks ago. The first year of her marriage her husband was sick six months with malaria. Witness sent first for Dr. Hughes, and, as he was not in, for Dr. Duggan, who came. She had hemorrhage of the lungs. He made four visits. The fourth visit was on June 16. Either her sister or Mrs. Meighan was in attendance upon her at each of the four visits. On June 20 he came again in the morning. That day he sounded her lungs, but did nothing more.

On the 23d he called again in the morning, He wanted to sound her lungs again and did so, and that was the time he attempted to assault her. She was very weak from hemorrhage. At 8 o'clock in the evening her sister came and she told her what had happened.

MORNING TENEMENT FIRE.

Little Joe Jacobs Overlooked in the Confusion of a Hurried Escape-Tenants in Their Night-Garments Shivering in West Forty-Third Street - Hardly Anything Saved Except the Building.

Fire was discovered in the five-story brick enement-house 345 West Forty-third street shortly before 5 o'clock this morning, and in the panic that followed little Joseph Jacobs, the five-year-old son of Abraham Jacobs, was burned to death.

The house is a double building and contained about ten families. Samuel Simmons, his wife and three children occupied the first floor, west, and it was in his rooms that the fire started. The strong wind carried the sparks through the elevator shaftway, igniting the tinder-like landings, and in less than ten minutes the house from cellar to roof was beyond the help of the Fire Department. What caused the fire no one knows definitely. Mrs. John Fleury, who lives on the second floor, directly over the Simmons', says that she was awakened about 4.45 o'clock by an explosion, and in less than five minutes smoke began to pur into her rooms. Her husband rushed into the hallway, but was driven back by flames.

A second attempt was unsuccessful, and helping his wife and family through the narrow passageway, with nothing on, save their night-clothes, he rushed to the nearest box and gave the alarm. floor, west, and it was in his rooms that the

In short order the firemen were on hand. In the mean time Mr. Fleury and a policeman had awakened the inmates, who, terrorstricken and almost unked, clambered down the fire-escapes in the rear.

Some in their fright rushed to the roof and ran across to neighboring houses, while others in their haste to escape the flames improved from second story windows for

An immediate search was made and his charred remains were found in the wreck in the little bedroom. The parents became almost distracted with grief.

Nothing in the nature of personal effects was saved, and as few, if any, of the families were insured, they literally lose their homes and clothing.

For an hour the thinly clad, unfortunate tenants wandered about, though friends on every hand offered them shelter and clothes. It is said that Simmons's servant is a green girl, and in her hurry to make the morning fire used kerosene to precipitate matters.

The interior of the building is a total wreck, barely the floors remaining. The loss is estimated at $20,000. The building is owned by Denis Smith, of 108 East Thirteenth street.

Desperate Fight with a Bear.

George Howard and Albert Skinner, while hunt ng in Lycoming County, Ps. , found two bear cubs, which they took in their arms, intending to carry them to their camp. They had not proceeded far when they heard something after them, crashing when they heard something after them, craning through the brosh at a lively rate. It was the of bear. They dropped the cubs, and Skinner fred a the the enraged brute. The cubs scampered awa and the bear, wounded just enough to make he furfous, rushed upon the hunters. Then ensued lively hand to hand fight, the bear using its paw is weapons, and the hunters clubbing her w as weapons, and the namers closing acr with the butta or their guns. At length Skinner was fortu-nate enough to get a shot at the best, killing her almost instability. Both Skinner and Howard were terribly lacerated and very weak when the battle ended.

KING FROST ARRIVES ON TIME. BOSSLETS AWAITING ORDERS.

Platt's Plans.

The New York City home of ex-Senator Thomas C. Platt, is at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. Senator Hiscock always stops at the same hotel. He arrived there last Tuesday evening and will not leave for Washington efore to-morrow night.

Whenever Senator Hiscock is at the Fifth Avenue Hotel he spends the evening with Boss Platt and is seldom seen in the corrilors after 8 p. M.

It has also been noted that as soon as Senstor Hiscock arrives in the city a host of Republican statesmen from the rural districts arrive too. For instance, the following distinguished statesmen are now registered at uptown hotels: Senator Raines, Senator Vedder, Senator Coggeshall and Assemblyman Frennont Cole, candidate for Speaker, and ex-Assemblymen James Manville, defeated for Senator in the Rensselaer district. Senator-elect Erwin and several other legislative pilgrims are expected to-day.

Hiscock and Platt deny that a formal conference is being held. That is perhaps true. Boss Platt usually confers with himself and then gives the ordes to the bosslets. He hears the views of the bosslets and then retires to his room to decide upon a programme. He is now fixing up his slate for the organization of the next Legislature, and Senator Hiscock is assisting him.

Boss Platt is very much troubled about the Senate. He wishes to retain his grip, but finds that there are jealousies and dissensions among his own followers who have been reelected. o-day. He was admitted to bail in $40,000 by Justice Barrett at noon.

At 10.10 o'clock this morning Deputy Sheriff Kaufman went to Ludlow Street Jail and served upon Warden J. P. Keating an order from Sheriff Grant, signed by Under Sheriff J. B. Sexton, which read: "Take Jacob Sharp to the Supreme Court, Chambers, at 10.30 o'clock."

Sharp had passed the night in restlessness, as usual, and had but just turned away from his frugal breakfast. He had not shown the slightest interest in his case, except that he was more wakeful yesterday, and this morning he seemed expectant at times.

Warden Keating went to Sharp's room and told him of the order and that he must prepare to move. Mrs. Sharp, the faithful slave of the old man, dressed him with more enthusiasm than at any time these five months, and with a cane in either hand Mr. Sharp essayed to leave his room. It was found that he needed help and Warden Keating, whose sympathy has been touched by the feeble condition of his prisoner, supported him on one side and Deputy Sheriff Kaufman on the other, down the jall steps and to a carriage which was in waiting. Sharp were a suit of sheep's gray, much faded and almost threadbare. Over this was a rich chinchilla overcoat, and on his shoulders was thrown a seal-brown travelling shawl, bordered with a red and gray stripe. A silk hat with a deep black band completed his dress. Warden Keating went to Sharp's room and his dress.

His progress to the carriage was a pitiful sight, for it was evident that he was too feeble to sustain himself. George Sharp, his grandson, put in an appearance at this moment and took a seat on the box. He was the grandson, but in an appearance at this moment and took a seat on the box. He was the custodian of a valise containing necessaries to be used in case Mr. Sharp was taken suddenly ill. Mrs. Sharp brought this out to her grandson. This was the first time Sharp had been out of the jail since his sentence on July 14 last.

The carriage was driven rapidly to the Court-House which Tweed's men made to cost the city nearly $15,000,000, and then the old man was half carried into the office of Sheriff Grant. He was given a seat in Mr. Sexton's room, and found there his other grandson, who is manager of his farm at Rome.

Sharp was very much exhausted, and his face wore the flush of excitement. Deacon Richardson was there to offer himself as a bondsman for Sharp, and the two old men chatted together pleasantly. Sharp grew interested, actually smilled and his eyes brightened somewhat.

To look at Sharp as he sat in his chair, one would not think of him as a sick man. He is an old man to be sure, but he looks like a hale and hearty old man.

While all this was going on, Sharp's indefatigable counsel, Congressman W. Bourke Cockran, was at the office of District-Attorney Martine. He was accompanied by John H. Selines, Sharp's son-in-law, J. H. MoLean, Secretary of the Twenty-third Street
Railway, who was a witness in Sharp's trial,
Lawyer William Hildredth Field, George Shepherd and Isaac Hendrix, who were owners of the Broadway stage line, which went out of existence when Sharp's railway began operations. They were then to offer bonds for Jacob Sharp's apperance when he

Presently William H. Penny drew up a bail bond and George Shepherd, who resides at 323 West Twenty-second street, and Issac Hendrix, of 310 West Thirty-fourth street, signed it.

After Messrs. Shepherd and Hendrix had signed the bond Sharp was asked to affix his signature. He could not sit at a desk, and it was necessary that a board should be placed upon the old man's knees. Feter Mitchell and Sharp's grandson each held an end of the board. Sharp tried, but it was a great effort. He bent down his head, took hold of the nen with nervy us hand, and began to
